FAIRHAVEN from PLAYS OF PURE LAND by Adrian Guthrie

(At the extreme end of a spit of sand or with a still sea beyond to a horizon.)

Strindberg The sea beats the drum skin sand at Fairhaven.

This same Fairhaven which was once a place of family holidays.

The same sky - bleached blue. And the sea - a yellow blue surge.

That, over there, past the estuary is Guiltbluff, with the lighthouse on it.

Perhaps I'll never leave this place now but always remain in my haven.

'Haven' takes on a new meaning when your holiday is unending. Could I move on if I wished? Do I wish, will, want?

Bosse I want to recall Summer hours in the house by that same sea -

I want to listen to the sea and feel the Summer sun

I want to remember other Summers by the sea, other times shared with my daughter's father - my daughter's father - the writer, Strindberg.

I call that name -I summon him: August Strindberg, writer of plays, come and take your part.

(Strindberg turns, as if summoned. He assumes an obliging attitude. They still do not see each other.)

Bosse Say your lines, now.

Strindberg May 31st, 1900

Froken Bosse visited me,

first time.

Bosse God, that's his voice!

He's reading from the diary -

The Occult Diary.

Strindberg At the dress rehearsal of

To Damascus -

an inexplicable scene with Bosse: I went on stage to thank her there, surrounded by a lot of people and talking to her seriously about the scene with the kiss her face suddenly grew larger, came closer, and became supernaturally beautiful, while her eyes enveloped me.

Then, without a word, she ran off,

and I stood there dazed - intoxicated by this miracle.

After this she haunted me for three days - I could feel her presence in the room.

Bosse So it was,

he imagined my presence before we married and after I left him a renowned relationship!

Strindberg I fancied I had telepathic relations with her.

Bosse So he did.

A renowned relationship mine with Strindberg!

But there was more to it than that - more poetry...

And the diary is only one version of it ...

Strindberg To Damascus Part Three is written with her in my mind.

For we now "live together" telepathically, and she has initiated me into a sexual relationship

more intense than any in the flesh.

Bosse Look!

The figure over there, looking out over the sea! Strindberg!

(She laughs.)

Now, he'll walk away towards the inlet, towards the light.

Then, he'll stop

out on the furthest tip of the spit.

(She laughs.)

Strindberg February 12th.

Woke 2 am.

Possessed her when she sought me. My telepathic relationship with her has intensified alarmingly. In my thoughts I live with her.

It threatens to bring about a catastrophe.

Bosse I dream I am here.

This is my dream.

By dreaming I secure a world around myself.

I keep my imagination to myself.

Strindberg didn't -

he wrote his fantasies

as if they were common currency.

He didn't speak of them to me, however, he spoke of his feelings in abstractions...

Strindberg Today I found myself choosing the furniture of the bride's bedroom from a catalogue!

I feel myself to be engaged to her.

March 1st.

Woke feeling my fate had been decided.

Wrote a letter to Bosse -

it should be delivered at this moment.

I know nothing -

I have no presentiment of anything.

March 5th.

Wrote to answer her letter to me. Despaired she would come. She arrived at four o'clock. At five o'clock I was engaged.

May 6th.

Married for the third time after an engagement full of marvellous moments and brave struggles against the ugly.

May 8th.

She says I am the man for her.

Harmony. Jealousy.

She went to a masked ball. I bought trunks and threatened to go away.

Sleeping apart. Reconciled.

June 22nd. Harried went to the country. Two white pigeons.

25th.

Harriet home.

Reading my play.

26th.

Radiant morning, full of joy and hope.

In the evening she left without saying goodbye without telling me where she was going.

Loss, sorrow, despair.

August 9th.

She is pregnant.

Bosse I love the sunsets here -

the descent into the womb.

Night moves in.

I half expect that promontory with its little light talking, talking, to suddenly become a volcano, and shower us all with ashes and penance and pity.

In the sunset Giltbluff - gilt - golden guilt.

Shit, shit, shit.

A writer has an advantage over a stupid actress because a writer has the last say!

Keeps having it!

Because it's written down! And can be read generation after generation.

Strindberg

(Speaking to the sea.) Thou, who art all fire, have mercy on me.

Bosse

There he stands, hour after hour, night after night, on that corridor of sand waiting -

Blindly waiting for some signal - a sign which I cannot give him, in honesty, I cannot give it.

Strindberg

Read Buddhism all day.

I will leave here like a medicant priest carrying nothing with me.

Allowing ne love to stain my tranquil pages.

I want to be released from the distress of love.

Love is sin.

Bosse

I am alone, without parents, or lover, or children. Strindberg Does she know I am here.

Bosse Just my self.

Just this self.

Strindberg Does she know I stand here - in this hell,

it looks quite cold not like the fiery hell in the children's stories.

It is stupidly cold - and my self possession disappears in fits of shivering convulsively.

Bosse I was his alchemical experiment.

With our relationship he tested his work on transmutation.

And I, the crucible, bore the base metal and produced gold - or, rather, did not.

But if I was his vessel, I was also his Sphinx.

I placed the riddle and he answered it.

So it was,

he had chosen me to do this.

But he seemed uncertain of his own ability to answer -

Strindberg I answered her riddle

Bosse Don't say that, you didn't know where to begin.

Strindberg You do know I'm here!

Bosse I summoned you!

This is my dream.

Strindberg No!

Bosse Move a little closer. (He moves towards her.)

That will do!

Now, answer my riddle.

Strindberg No. I won't listen.

Bosse You were my captive.

I untied you.

You were impatient with me.

I bore you.
I let you go.
Who am I?

Strindberg What? Say it again.

Bosse You were my captive.

I untied you.

You were impatient with me.

I bore you.
I let you go.
Who am I?

Strindberg I was Death's captive.

Death! (He moves closer to her.)

Bosse (Laughs derisively.)

No!

We've done with Death!

Strindberg You are my wife - (He moves closer to her.)

Bosse You cast me in that role,

but it doesn't best answer my riddle.

Strindberg (Moving closer.)

I was your captive ... then I was untied ... I was impatient ... Something about you boring me ...

Bosse (Laughs.)

You have a way with words - but only your own!

Strindberg You bore me. (Moving to her.)

You are my mother!

Bosse Oh, a strange incestuous thing!

Strindberg (Laughs.) The Mother!

Bosse And me thirty years younger than you!

Strindberg The Terrible Mother.

Bosse Terrible in my appetite!

Strindberg Terrible in your table manners! (They laugh.)

So you bare me in this alchemy -

an unfair thing I ask of you.

Bosse (Reconciled.)

Unfair indeed!

Strindberg I ask you to reconcile me to life.

Bosse And to women.

Strindberg Women preoccupy me - but I cannot say I've done them justice. Somehow, I believe they hold the key to life.

Bosse We bring life into the world.

Strindberg I though your skirts emerge a whole man.

And you, through your labour bare life itself.

While everywhere we create an ornate culture to substitute our creative labours

for The Labour.

Bosse We shared a dream -

Strindberg No.

Two people dreamed,

and in their dreams they met.

Bosse You cast me in a role

I could not play.

Strindberg You asked me questions

I could not answer.

Bosse Rest, now.

Strindberg Harriet,

may I still dream of you?

Bosse We may all dream.

But rest now.

Although only an actor in our play you wrote a text which we then lived by -

Now I have summoned you to answer what was left unanswered. - now, you must rest.

While we may all dream, we may all write, we may all play the parts. The sea at Fairhaven beats the same for each player in the play.

The waves drum - our foot beats.

But the foot fall will be heard when the foot's moved on.

The waves do not leave the sea to beat the drum skin sand.

Rest now - and I will rest.

Listen: the sea.
